

CRIS CARTER

Hall of Fame NFL Wide Receiver

Cris Carter is a former NFL wide receiver for the Philadelphia Eagles, Minnesota Vikings and Miami Dolphins. Over the course of his sixteen seasons (1987-2002), Cris was named to eight Pro Bowls, was twice named first-team All-Pro, and was voted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2013. In college, Cris starred at Ohio State, where he was a consensus All-American after his junior season.

After retiring with the second-most receptions and touchdowns as a receiver in the history of the NFL, Cris entered the media. He was a studio analyst for HBO's Inside the NFL from 2002-2007. From 2008-2016, Cris served as a studio analyst on ESPN's signature football shows, Sunday NFL Countdown and Monday Night Countdown. Cris was also a regular co-host on ESPN's top-rated radio show, Mike and Mike, and was an analyst on ESPN's Super Bowl and NFL Draft coverage. Most recently, Cris served as a co-host on Fox Sports 1's daily morning show, First Things First, where he debated the hottest topics in sports.

Cris is the author of Going Deep, published in July 2013, which examines the evolution of the wide receiver position; he's also a sought-after public speaker and has spoken for many Fortune 500 companies. Cris speaks about leadership, teamwork, and overcoming adversity, including his previous struggles with addiction.

He currently resides in South Florida with his family.

Updated EMB 6/22/26
