

Jason Weiss helps leaders and teams become the kind of people others want to trust, follow, and grow around.

As an executive coach, keynote speaker, and organizational consultant, he works with senior leaders, executive teams, and organizations that understand performance is never just about strategy, process, or talent. It's about people. It's about trust, pressure, presence, communication, and the countless human dynamics that determine whether a team comes alive or quietly breaks apart. Jason helps leaders and teams make sense of those dynamics and use them to create stronger cultures, deeper alignment, and more meaningful results.

His perspective was shaped long before the boardroom. Before stepping into the world of organizational consulting, Jason built a career in the performing arts as an actor, director, and educator. That work demanded a deep understanding of human behavior, emotional truth, connection, story, and the subtle signals that make people believe, disengage, resist, or commit. It taught him that every room has an emotional current, every leader sends a message before speaking, and every team is shaped as much by what goes unspoken as by what appears on the slide deck.

Today, Jason brings that lens to Fortune 500 companies and leadership teams around the world. He helps leaders communicate with greater clarity, show up with greater conviction, and create environments where teams don't just comply, but contribute. His keynotes are known for being intellectually sharp, emotionally honest, and immediately useful. Audiences leave with a deeper understanding of themselves and each other, a clearer language for what's getting in the way, and a renewed standard for what leadership and collaboration can be when they are both deeply human and genuinely effective.
